Prior to studying law, Elliott had a ten year career as a doctor. He studied Medicine at the University of Cambridge and spent six years as a junior doctor gaining a broad range of experience in both primary and secondary care. He qualified as a General Practitioner in 2020 and has an extremely good understanding of the NHS and primary care systems. He continued to work as a GP while studying for the GDL (Distinction) and the Bar course (Distinction). During his time as a GP, Elliott was involved in teaching and co-authored a book aimed at helping those prepare for the GP application process.

While studying for the Bar course, Elliott volunteered for the BPP Legal Advice Clinic, where he advised clients seeking help from the Welfare Department. He was also involved with the campaigns team of the Royal National Institute for Blind people, where he helped advocate for those with sight loss.
